The Stonewall-Jackson Memorial. Not long before the evacuation of Charleston by the Confederate forces in 1865 there was received here a memorial of General T. J. Jackson, made by residents of the British West India Islands, and presented to the State of South Carolina. The cases containing it had not been opened at the time of the entrance into the city of the Federal forces, and it was seized and sent to Washington with other "spoils of war," and deexistence and probable whereabouts of the relic, and made application to the Secretary of War, through Congressman Evins, for its return. The application was promptly and courteously granted, and Congressman Evins forwarded the precious memento to Charleston.

The Jackson memorial, us received from Washington, is composed of shell-work upon a wocden foundation. It is altogether about ten feet high, the base being three and a half feet square.
